Accelerating growth in China while other major economies slow

During the month of April, the NAV of AGCM China Stars Fund RC1 SEK share class increased by +3.0%. Corporate financial reports for 1Q19 from our holdings have generally been strong with revenues typically increasing by between 10% and 20% for the first quarter compared to the same period last year.

As communicated by China's Ministry of Finance, the annualized amount of the recent tax and fee cuts will reach close to Rmb 2 trillion, equal to about 2% of 2019 estimated GDP. This means it will be the largest tax reduction in China's history whether measured by the absolute amount or as a percent of government revenues. It is substantially larger than the tax cut in the US last year that resulted in a major boost to economic growth, corporate earnings and equity market valuations. To little surprise, International observers are now having to revise their forecasts. The International Monetary Fund (IMF) recently raised their forecast for China's economic growth this year to 6.3%, while forecasts for most other major economies were revised down.

While the US-China trade negotiations are now in a final stage, the corresponding trade talks between China and the EU lag by at least year. At their annual summit in Brussels, China and the European Union agreed to create a mechanism for monitoring each other's pledges regarding the opening-up of their respective markets. In a joint statement issued by Chinese Premier Li Keqiang, European Council President Donald Tusk and European Commission President Jean-Claude Juncker, the two sides said they would "establish a political mechanism to continuously monitor the progress in the negotiations and to report to leaders by the end of the year on the progress made". This declaration is a major step towards the creation of an EU-China Comprehensive Investment Agreement by next year to improve market access and eliminate practices that discriminate against foreign investors. We believe such an agreement, if reached, will prove to be a huge opportunity especially for the Chinese manufacturing sector.

Last month we listed the following reasons why we remain optimistic on the outlook for Chinese equity markets in 2019. They are still valid and worth to repeat:

- China's government has shifted its policy early this year from tight to highly expansive with large stimulus packages in the form of tax cuts, easier credit and accelerated infrastructure investments. This development has in our view not been fully priced in by the market, especially not by Western investors.
- Valuations are still low, the MSCI China trading at 13x earnings and CSI300 (A-shares) at 13x.
- Investors have overreacted to the trade issue and the situation is more likely to improve than deteriorate.
- Chinese A-shares will be boosted by a quadrupled inclusion factor in several of MSCI's regional equity indices. The inclusion factor increases in three steps from 5% to 20%, in May, September and November.

In April, the equity market of Hong Kong surpassed that of Japan to become the world's third-largest with a combined market capitalization of USD 5.8 trillion, behind only the US and the Chinese mainland markets. It is remarkable, that in the largest and fastest growing equity markets in the world, most Western investors still only have a small fraction of their savings.
