30 company visits in Asia confirm – the growth continues

During the month of November, the NAV of the AGCM China Stars Fund RC1 SEK share class increased by +0.7%

Our five-member investment management team is now on the final stretch of a research trip to South Korea, Singapore and Hong Kong. We have soon visited 30 companies, mostly existing fund holdings, and we have met with 15 top rated equity analysts in the region to double check our views on the outlook for companies and industries.

We are presently in Hong Kong, and after last week's District Council election, the city is somewhat calmer than during our last visit in September. With 2.94 million votes counted, the election turnout was a record 71%, up from 47% in the last election in 2015. The pro-democracy parties won 388 of the 452 seats, up from 125 in 2015. By contrast, the largest pro-Beijing party, the DAB, won only 21 seats, down from 119 seats in 2015. As a result, the pro-democracy camp seized control of 17 of the 18 District Councils. The significance of this result when it comes to selecting the next Chief Executive remains to be seen but the message from the people of Hong Kong to the leaders in Beijing was powerful.

A recent obstacle to a near term conclusion of the long-awaited US-China trade deal, is the fact that President Trump had no option but to sign the Hong Kong Human Rights and Democracy Act passed by the US Congress last week. This bill requires annual reviews of Hong Kong's special trade status under US law, while also sanctioning officials deemed responsible for human rights abuses. This was seen by the Chinese leadership as foreign interference in Chinese domestic policy and has for now made it more difficult for President Xi Jinping to sign a deal which according to the White House is more or less agreed. A deal remains the most likely outcome but for Xi Jinping not to appear soft to his domestic audience, some time will need to pass.

Perhaps a more important factor for equity markets than tariffs, and less talked about, is central bank policy. In the US, the growth of the monetary base as measured by M2 has accelerated from 4.0% YoY to 7.4% YoY in the past six months. Combined with the renewed Federal Reserve balance sheet expansion where the Fed is buying short-term Treasury bills at a rate of USD 60 billion per month, more money is pumped into the system providing a significant support for equity markets. Also in China, monetary conditions have been loosened. The Ministry of Finance recently announced it brought forward 1 trillion yuan (USD 142 bn) of the 2020 special purpose bond allowance to this year, giving local governments more room to accelerate local infrastructure projects such as subways, roads, hospitals and schools.

Alibaba successfully floated USD 13 billion worth of new shares on the Hong Kong Stock exchange in a secondary listing, and the share price both in Hong Kong and New York have rallied by around 13% into Friday's close. Alibaba remains the largest holding in both of our funds, since we believe it is still early days for this great company. The Alibaba listing was the largest in Hong Kong since 2010, and it helped the exchange climb to the top of the global IPO league table this year before Nasdaq. A well needed boost for Hong Kong's economy and self-confidence.
